MOBILE DEVELOPMENT

With the introduction of the smartphone, the smartphone has become the most used electronic device in human history. Research shows that the average human looks at his/her phone a staggering 52 times a day. These statistics make the mobile phone one of the biggest digital markets in the world. And at the same time, there are over 5000+ mobile applications released per day, which makes this market very competitive. It means that having a mobile application is just a start. A mobile application should have a solid user interface and user experience for it to stand out amongst the 2.6 million android and 2.2 million iOS applications. At Eloquent, every mobile application starts its journey with requirement analysis. After we analyze and understand our client requirements, we get into wireframing and concept design and prototyping before getting into the development and going live. Most of all, we do all this in a full-duplex manner with the person who knows the application best: the client. We work with you to align your mobile apps with your business objectives and your success. We focus on getting you the latest and the greatest technological advances built into each mobile app that we build for you.
